

Do you want to help children become better readers?

We are researchers at Royal Holloway, University of London studying whether using English subtitles while watching television may help children learn to read.

- Does your child attend Year 3?
- Is English the language your child speaks at home?
- Does your child watch television or streaming services for at least 5 hours per week without subtitles?

Join us for a fun study and we will make a difference together.

What will happen?

We will test your child's reading skills in school twice over six weeks. In between the tests, we will ask your child to watch television with or without English subtitles. We will measure how reading changes over these six weeks. You will get a £50 Amazon voucher as compensation for your time.

Interested? Contact us: subtitles.rhul@gmail.com

Visit our webpage to learn more about the study:
www.rastlelab.com/intervention

Or watch our short video:
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6gRHxEV6Rlg>

Professor Kathy Rastle
Dr Anastasiya Lopukhina